It is commonly reported that Marshal McMahon will resign the Presidency of the Republic, but six months longer, when he will resign and return to the command of the army. It is considered certain that the Republican form of government will be succeeded by a monarchy, and it is deemed essential that Marshal McMahon, who possesses great influence with the army, should be in command on the occasion of the change.

Signor Conti and Messrs. Russell, Guernsey and Fraser, arbitrators appointed under the Washington Treaty to investigate the claims of British subjects against the government of the United States for injuries received during the war, have made an order for $7,322 in gold in favor of Messrs. Few persons realize how fast the city is growing. Improvements are being made in every portion of it and builders are so pressed that it is a hard matter to get them to estimate on some very large contracts. And the improvements are not only in new buildings. The changing of store fronts, raising of ceilings, curbing the gutters and laying out grass plots next the walks, and the beautifying of private grounds are all giving Indianapolis a city-like appearance.

THE report that the people of the Fourth Ward were raising a subscription to procure a house for "Wicked Bill" Gibson, seems to be unfounded. He still lives in the Third Ward. Had a Democrat ever done as Mr. Gibson is doing, no one would have howled so long and so loud as that pure-minded patriot. But now he knows how it is himself and straddles two wards with an equanimity which indicates that $150 a year and the position is a prize worth holding to, even at the little sacrifice of the respect of honest men.

THE "People's Convention," at Columbus, Ohio, yesterday, nominated a full ticket and adopted resolutions which will be found elsewhere. They read well. It is not hard, however, to get up nice-sounding resolutions. Words are at the command of both the just and the unjust. The convention was managed mainly by the progressive Democrats, chiefly George E. Pugh and Thomas E. Cunningham, the author of the Allen county resolutions. The ticket is composed of Democrats and Liberal Republicans. It is hoped that the regular Democratic Convention which meets next Wednesday may endorse it, or at any rate adjourn without taking definite action, thus allowing the opposition to concentrate in its support. But without setting up any claim to prophesy, we prepared to express the opinion, that the Democratic Convention will do nothing of the sort. Senator Thurman and his hard shells will "fix things" in the same old shape and run in the same old groove, butting their heads against the same old stone wall. Unfortunately, previous concessions have developed the absence of brains and no particular damage can result.

THERE is one branch of manufacturing for which no locality is better adapted than Indianapolis, and then which no more remunerative investment could be found. It is a business which requires no particular skill and no very expensive machinery; the material can always be had here in the greatest abundance, and the demand for the product is greater than the supply. We mean the manufacturing of coffins. Formerly every undertaker made his own, except in special cases, but now they generally depend upon manufacturers. There are but few of these in the country. One of the largest establishments is located at Richmond, in this State, and it has grown in a few years from a small concern, until now, we are informed, it is the largest manufactory in that city and employs more men. It sends coffins all over the United States, and is always behind with its orders. All kinds and styles are made and sold to undertakers, who trim them as desired. Now there is no better point than Indianapolis for such a business. Lumber is plenty, shipping facilities are unequalled. It would not require a great capital to begin, and there seems to be a good chance to make a fortune.

If American citizenship is worth anything, it ought to afford a guarantee against such outrageous injustice as Hoy, Keegan & Co. are suffering from the bull-headed, atrocious authorities at Manitoba. They have undertaken to harbor and protect an unmitigated scoundrel, but in doing so, they ought not to be permitted to imprison and punish American citizens who erred, if they erred at all, unwittingly. (Sentinel.)

This is sympathy of a very maudlin kind, interspersed with a little spread-eagled American citizenship and citizenship. Manitoba is part of a government independent of the United States, and controlling her own territory. American citizens have no rights there above her own citizens. These men went over there and attempted to kidnap a notorious scoundrel, but still a man who was entitled to the rights of the law. They are being treated with unnecessary severity, perhaps, but it is such severity as the law admits. They are receiving the punishment due their unlawful acts, and it does not affect the value of American citizenship one way or the other, for that citizenship does not license a man to go into another country and commit crime. To say that if they erred they erred "unwittingly" is puerile. Ignorance is no excuse for wrong doing. Besides the indications are that these "detective" gentlemen knew very well what they were doing.

THE other day, the Council's organ spoke out in this way: "Six weeks ago, 'College avenue from Tinker street to the north corporation line was torn up as 'temporarily for the purpose of laying down a black pavement but really that the contractor might not forfeit the job while 'he is busily engaged in finishing something else. Is there no relief from this 'state of things?' We should say that the chance of 'relief' was small, and growing smaller as the town grows larger. College avenue torn up and left impassable to accommodate some contractor's arrangements for riding several profitable projects, one after the other, when he can't ride them all at once, is only a sample of a great deal of city work. It is ordered, not because it is needed, or because the people demand it, but because contractors want something to do that they can make money on. Public convenience could easily, and would readily, dispense with it, but the 'horse leeches' want it, and they get it. Property owners may grumble and resist, but they are nothing either to the Council or the contractors. The inconsiderable item that supplies the money is left to take it out in grumbling. They have got to pay just whatever the contractor chooses to exact, and the cheapest way out of the difficulty is, as the Germans say, 'through the nose.' South street sidewalks, or one of them, were ordered to be stone-curbed and paved about six months ago, and the notices were posted up on all the fence corners three or four months ago, and the contractor has so far complied with his bargain as to haul up a few loads of bowlders, a few blocks of unusually poor stone, and scatter them just where they are likely to be most in the way. He has come as near to his work as 'Cousin Sally Dillard' did to Capt. Rice's office. The work was not needed when the Council ordered it. It is not needed now. Nobody asked for it, that we can hear of. It was done, we suppose, to give contractors a favor, which may be divided. Who knows? Some of our Councilmen are not above the suspicion of making money by a plant use of their office.

THE announcement of the death of this well-known journalist and politician will create surprise, except among his immediate friends who have been aware of his condition. But one short week ago he was in perfect health; to-day his tenement of clay, cold and still, is all that remains on earth of the bright, generous-hearted, genial man. Congestion of the brain came upon him as suddenly as a thief in the night and snapped the cord of life.

Mr. Sproule was born in Tyrone county, Ireland, in 1825, educated at Trinity College, Dublin, for the Presbyterian ministry, but chose to emigrate to this country when he was eighteen. He settled at Rushville, in this State, entering a store as clerk for a while, but afterwards assisting Hon. John L. Robinson, then Sheriff of the county. When Robinson was elected to Congress, Mr. Sproule went with him, filling a position as clerk, in both the House and Senate. In 1852 he published a campaign paper called the Madisonian at Madison, and after the death of Vice President King became private secretary to Jesse D. Bright, acting Vice President. During a portion of Buchanan's administration he was a special agent of the Treasury Department. After the war broke out he settled in Rushville, publishing a paper. He subsequently removed to Evansville when he edited the Times. He afterwards removed to Princeton where he lived until 1868, when he came here and accepted a position on the Sentinel. He also held a position as special agent of the Treasury during a part of Johnson's administration. During the last four years he has been connected with the Sentinel in various capacities, and acted as Secretary of the Democratic State Central Committee during the last campaign, a position his great acquaintance and political knowledge peculiarly fitted him for.

Mr. Sproule was a man of fine attainments, of very clear perceptions, and of great executive ability. He was quick to act, readily grasped all the details and in the management of a political canvass manifested a great capacity for business. It was, perhaps, as a political journalist that he most excelled. Like the war horse, he snuffed the battle from afar and was eager for the fray. Nothing delighted him more, and in the contest he was relentless, asking no quarter and giving none. In private life he was warm-hearted, impulsive and generous to a fault, a fair specimen of his race, and withal his own worst enemy. His life, which had so much of excellence and promise in it, was warped in the latter years by the very social and convivial traits which made him dear to many. He might have done so much had he possessed the habits of patient industry which enable men of far less talent to rise in fortune and the world's esteem.

Mr. Sproule married a daughter of Hon. John S. Campbell, of Rushville, in 1852, who, with four children, survives him.

THE PEOPLE'S MOVEMENT.

The Nominations and the Platform.

The People's Convention at Columbus O. nominated a full ticket yesterday, and adopted a platform, as follows:
Governor, Isaac C. Collins, of Hamilton, Democrat; Lieutenant Governor, A. Saunders Platt, of Logan, (Liberal); Attorney General, Sarahanna Myers, of Stark, (Liberal); Supreme Judge, T. E. Ewing, of Fairfield, (Democrat); D. W. C. Loudon, of Brown, (Liberal); Board of Public Works, James McBeth, of Allen, (Democrat); State Treasurer, Jonathan Harshman, of Montgomery, (Democrat); Comptroller of the Treasury, C. R. L. Butler, of Franklin, (Liberal).

THE PLATFORM.

1. That we declare against the infallibility of party; that when the caucus or the convention fails to present fit candidates for office it is the high privilege, as well as the bounden duty of all good citizens, to withhold their votes from such candidates, and regardless of party affiliations to support the best men presented for official position.
2. That both the Republican and the Democratic parties have outlived the issues in which they had their origin, and have outlived their usefulness, and a new organization of parties is demanded in the interests of the public welfare.

3. That the Republican party having the control of both branches of Congress and of the executive department, is directly responsible for the legislation known as the "salary grab," for the squandering of the public lands in grants to private corporations, for the release of criminals from their just obligations to the government, and other manifestations of corruption, as developed by the Credit Mobilier and other investigations; and that those members of the Democratic party who have aided or acquiesced in such legislation, equally deserve public condemnation.
4. That we believe that the fundamental purpose of Government is the protection of persons and property, and not the meddling with and the regulation of the business industry or consequence of its citizens, nor the assumption of work by Federal, State or municipal government as may so fully and should properly be left to individual enterprise.

5. That corruption can be successfully combated only by the removal or lessening of temptation. We are in favor of a reduction of the functions now exercised by the government; a consequent limitation of Government bureaus and officials, believing as we do that a continually increasing army of Federal officers is an evil increasing in danger as the country grows.
6. That grants of national lands in land or money, and of special privileges and exemptions to National banks and other great moneyed corporations, and all fostering of monopolies at the expense of the whole people, are unjust and oppressive.

7. That the practice of electing stockholders and officers of national banks to seats in Congress, whereby the great gains of continued irredeemable paper money are secured to those institutions on the votes of interested parties, is a national scandal which deserves the condemnation of every good citizen, and ought to be prevented by proper legislation.
8. That we insist upon a strict observance by the general government, of the constitutional limitations of its powers, and we demand home government in all local affairs.
9. We believe that the business of the government should be conducted upon the same principles that regulate the business of private individuals. We believe, therefore, that the appointment of subordinate officers should depend upon their qualifications, and that their tenure should depend on their fitness and efficiency, and in this respect return to the practice of the early days of the Republic is highly desirable and necessary.

10. That duties on imports, as long as such duties are necessary, should be imposed for purposes of revenue only, and not for the purpose of benefiting or enriching private individuals or companies, or favoring particular branches of industry at the expense of the whole people.
11. That it is the duty of the government to repeal all laws that favor capital to the prejudice of labor.

The Thought of a Mourning Mother.

BY MRS. MULOCK CRAIG.

My little baby is buried to-day:
Gone—down in the depths of the church yard
Up in the sky so dim and gray.
Who will take care of my little baby?
Who will kiss her?—her waxen feet,
That have never walked, and her small hand
sweet
Where I left a white lily, as was meet—
Who will kiss my little baby?
Who will teach her?—her wings to fly,
Her tiny limbs their new work to ply,
Her soft dimpled lips to sing sweetly—
Oh, who will teach my little baby?
I have a mother—who long ago died:
We speak of her now with our tears all dried:
She may know my pretty one, come to her side,
And be glad to see my little baby.
(Christ born of a woman, hear oh hear!
Thine angels are far off—she seems near.
Give her my child to mother when I die,
And I'll weep no more for my little baby.)
Surely in heaven thy stars do best
Keep a mother's heart in a mother's breast—
Give her my lamb, and I shall rest
If my mother takes care of my little baby.

REMEMBERED SCENES.

Fairies on the Lake.

or, to speak more correctly, sunrise on St. Mary's river. To see it my party on the Peerless—if two makes a party—was rash enough by moonlight, at Mackinaw, to promise to turn out at four o'clock in the morning. I would not have had the courage, I confess, if the discomfort had not been shared by another. The call of the hour at our door was not heard by my fair companion, and I took a wicked pleasure in awaking her.

"What are we getting up for?" she sleepily asked.

"That is your look out, not mine!" I rejoined. "You made the engagement."

"What engagement?" she demanded in some confusion of mind.

"To see the sun rise, to be sure. Hurry or we will be too late," I insisted.

There was not room to swing a cat in the little state room we occupied, but we had learned to make the most of it, and sooner than any one would imagine we were ready to go on deck. How cold it was, as we picked our way along the damp guard to the forward part of the boat; and as we climbed the stairway to the hurricane deck the wind fairly took us off our feet. Early as it was, we were not the first on the ground. There was the editor from the Isle of Man, who had been all over the world and still protested that this trip on the Peerless from Chicago to Duluth was the pleasantest he had ever enjoyed. His wife was with him looking as fresh and rosy as the morn which time-worn comparison is not intended to apply to this particular morning. There, too, was Mr. Wadsworth, of the Laporte Argosy, who had previously declared nothing short of madness would drive him out of his bed at five o'clock in the morning. And at the last, Mr. Powell, of the Laporte Herald, came shivering on deck with his handsomely wife. Seven of us in all, including Captain McIntyre, who was too busily engaged taking the boat through the river to more than give us the top of the morning in good cheer. He had an eye to our comfort, however, and before the cold winds had quite chilled us to the bone, his man appeared with Mackinaw blankets to wrap around us. Oh! but they were soft and warm! Perfectly new, and woven of the finest wool, they clung to us like a golden fleece, only they were red; and by "us" must be understood Miss Davidson and I, who made my party. Thus shielded from the blast, we could look upon the sunrise with a reasonable amount of fortitude not to say satisfaction.

The geography of the Lakes was never quite clear to my mind, and I will not try to explain how going up the St. Mary's river the sun rose behind us to the left of the boat. Nor will I attempt to describe a tenth of the thousand islands that constitute the principal attractions of this portion of the route. They are of all sizes from a tuft of green to a mile in extent, and they present every variety of form. Often there are clusters of islands reminding one of the Three Sisters of Niagara river; and, there is always a conformity to the main land that make one lose sight of their isolation.

The main land slopes upward from the shore in gentle undulations, apparently susceptible of cultivation, to what can easily be imagined table-land interspersed with farm houses and thriving villages, springing corn, wheat fields and industrial wealth. But the almost total absence of habitation above the level of the shore, and the paucity of verdure (in the middle of July no further advanced than often in April with us) reminds one most forcibly of the shortness of summer and the severity of the winter. We were shown, as we came along where both in the canal and river, boats were frozen in last year before our winter had fairly begun. In many cases a boat's crew was obliged to walk for miles, at the risk of freezing to death, to reach a place of shelter. Sometimes they camped out in a rude tent made of the snow, and one poor fellow told me that he would have frozen if it had not been for his dog. The men, four in number, built a fire and lay in a row with their feet to it, taking turns in sleeping on the outside. When it came to my friend's turn he was glad to be close to his dog, and, too weary to move when the shaggy animal nudged his coat insufficient and crept to the fire to warm my informant hustled after him in a trice.

The snow was of every depth, from eight inches to as many feet, according to the drift; and we examined with some curiosity the Indian snow-shoes that carried the ice wrecked sailor safely across the country. They were the shape of a treacle, and from a yard and a quarter in length to a foot in breadth, were formed of stout hickory hoops, ingeniously laced and interlaced with leather thongs. There is no provision for boot or shoe heels, and to be comfortable they must be worn with moccasins, which last are warmer without stockings.

But this is a long digression from sunrise in midsummer on the St. Mary's river. As I said before, the sparse vegetation and in dense clumps the deeply suggestive of winter. One almost looked for hoar frost on the tree tops, and a crust of ice on the river.

It had been a cloudless night, and the moonlight was so bright that it was difficult to tell when the night ended and the day began. In that latitude there is a perceptible twilight of daylight, but it is at the expense of twilight and dawn, which in warmer climes make up so much of the charm of sunrise and sunset. Thus the grey of morn was not succeeded by the myriad glories of light and shade that with us herald the approach of the sun. A bend of the river gave us the first glimpse above the water, and the round, brassy orb as it assumed shape looked as cold as the moon just sinking to rest. One could even see the horizon underneath the sun before it warmed into life, shot forth its rays, and unveiled the mysterious splendors of cloudland. Then the brilliant panoramas faded from our sight.

As dissolving views, long before we could define its spectral figures and golden vistas far reaching to the gates of Paradise. There was not a fleck of a cloud to be seen and our attention was taken up with the landscape that looked somehow as if it had always rested in broad daylight and sunlight under a cloudless sky and would so remain to all eternity. The impression was not an agreeable one. It was much more interesting to watch the passage of our large steamer through the windings of the river.

At one point we counted six vessels around and had an opportunity of studying "one of those anomalous little crafts called 'logs.'"

I should call it a Thug for it looked almost human as it darted, sized, belloved and spluttered to and fro in the water. It reminded me of a stump-digger as it heaved the great vessel off the rocks and out of the sand; and the way it ran off with them—two at a time often—safely towing them up the falls was more like a plucky little woman than anything I know of. There was our lumbering steamer, over two hundred feet in length, with the most perfect machinery and equipment, that could not trust herself in the rapid current, made a narrow way by a vessel ground, lest an untoward luck would swing her ashore. If you will believe it, that smoky little tug, no bigger than a bandwagon, took her by the nose and led her through as deftly as if she had been a sailboat.

"Want a tug?" was the salutation that reached our steamer as we drew near Chicago, from the little craft alongside, in the tone precisely of a hotel runner's "Carriage, sir?"—and I never grew weary of observing its course. The river and bay were alive with tugs, and the air is black with their smoke. Still one never loses interest in them. They partake so much of the indomitable spirit of Chicago, and are, withal, such a fair illustration of the power of mind over matter, of genius over brute force.

A PERFECT DAY

From dawn to twilight was the 20th of July, of blessed memory, on Lake Michigan. Through the fog, storm and rain that had overcast our trip from Duluth to Mackinaw we had taken no note of time, but with the first breath of morning we inhaled a sense of Sabbath rest that never, for one moment, left us all day. How describe the beautiful hours so freighted with a joy in sense that the "moments ran themselves in golden sands."

"The day so mild, was heaven's own child."

I have tried in vain to remember how, with the sunshine, there was no glare, and now, with the lake as smooth as glass, there was a balmy freshness in the air. In the distance we could see the land slowly receding from view until about noon it disappeared. Neither was there a sail in sight, and we seemed as much alone on the wide waste of water as if in mid-ocean. It was here we enjoyed the finest effect of scenery. The water, which had varied in tint from grey to blue and green was now a lambent silver; the sky that closed down upon us like a world-wide tent was the purest ether, and pale rifts of blue and pink clouds bounded the horizon.

As we drifted—upon the upper deck the notion of our vessel was scarcely perceptible—it was astonishing how long the scene lasted; but after awhile specks of sail appeared in the distance, and before we could reckon the time, so dreamily passed the hours, a fine steamer and several vessels were breast of us.

Leaving over the shady side of the boat I was chafed in vain for the diamond display on the water that had delighted us the day before. Then the threatening of a squall made the waves rough and dark, and the white speck seen in the glim of sunshine were inescapably beautiful. Looking at them steadily they formed into a solid belt of light that grew tremulous with the motion of the wave took flight in the air and fell in diamond spray, each particular drop shying off in a circle of its own over the bosom of the Lake. As far as we could see ahead of us the magical transformation was going on; but the best manner of enjoying it was to keep the eye fixed upon one spot. Sometimes the drops of spray had the look of diamonds set in onyx, again they were multiform like a splendid heartsease, and again they resembled the light of a dark eye in woman. The spell was broken when Professor Clark instructed me that the peculiar effect was caused by the shadow of the spray.

"I wish the day could last always," was the sigh of more than one of my fellow-passengers as it faded, lovely in death into the tarry night. But to me the day is not dead. It lives forever in the sense of rest that it left behind. For one whole day to be lifted above the hard realities of life, to forget the past, and have no thought for the future is a blessing so seldom vouchsafed me, that I will remain a joy forever. DISEASE TING

Proclamation of the Mayor.

MAYOR'S OFFICE,
INDIANAPOLIS, July 10th, 1913.

The Common Council of the city of Indianapolis on last Monday evening having passed an ordinance entitled "An Ordinance compelling the inhabitants of the city of Indianapolis to disinfect their premises and to remove all impure and unwholesome substances." And the City Marshal, as directed by said ordinance, having notified me that he has posted a copy of said ordinance in five public places in each ward in said city, I do therefore hereby give notice that said ordinance takes effect and is in full force from and after this date, and all those affected thereby must govern themselves accordingly. And while thus notifying our citizens of the taking effect of said ordinance, I feel it to be my duty to urge upon each and every one the importance of its observance. Who would not give one day's labor and the small amount necessary to procure disinfectants to save a life or prevent sickness?
Now, as many hands make light work, if every one will go at once to work to comply with the provisions of the ordinance, no one will feel that it is burdensome, and in twenty-four hours from this time we will have the cleanest and healthiest, as we already have, the most attractive city in the Union.

Sign of a bankrupt Lafayette house, while invoicing—"No sale from day to day."

Harrison county jail being empty of prisoners, is used by the young people for holding socials in.

O. Hehl is bell boy at a Fort Wayne hotel. He complains that he is called for so much by the guests that he can't get a wink of sleep.

The Pharoas says the present is the busiest building season Lagansport has ever known. More brick will be laid up this season than in any two previous ones. The cry everywhere is "more more."

A well twenty-five feet in diameter and twenty-two feet deep throws to the surface 800 gallons of water per minute at Union City. Mains and machinery to supply the city with water have been contracted for.

A Lafayette young lady has on her forehead, according to the Courier, a "pernicious, a circumscribed subcutaneous inflammation, with a pointed pustular tumor on the apex." She declares, however, that it is "nothing but a common blem."

The wheat crop in Howard county is fully one-third less than it was estimated before it was cut. There are choice fields that will yield twenty to twenty-five bushels per acre, but they are very scarce. The average yield will not be ten, and may not be more than eight bushels.

The Vincennes Sun says that Knox county seems to have been the center of the Mount Builders' civilization, there being not less than three hundred in the county, all showing positive evidence of their artificial formation, and in extent of size rivaling, if not exceeding, any other collection in the United States.

John Mulgrew, watchman at the Tippecanoe county jail, is considerably bruised about the head and face, and a Mr. Hussian, of Lafayette, is badly cut in the face, side and abdomen, as the result of a hostile meeting in company with a woman on the street. A judicial investigation will decide who was the aggressor.

On Monday evening Miss Carrie Burton and her sister, daughters of Alfred H. Burton, of Mitchell, Lawrence county, were driving on Main street, when the horses became unmanageable and ran away, throwing the young ladies from the buggy, fracturing the arm and thigh of the former, and causing such other internal injuries as to cause her death on Saturday.

The cage of Barnum's black leopard, which lunched off an Episcopal clergyman just starting on his summer vacation at Buffalo, broke down in the streets of Lafayette, creating a panic, which was increased by a young man from Earl Park, who drew a revolver and swore by yonder stars to protect the young lady in his charge. The bystanders who had witnessed unblanching the almost escape of the wild beast, fled in dismay from the imminent deadly breach and muzzle of the revolver of the desperate and reckless young person from Earl Park.

GREAT SLAUGHTER

Fortunately not of man or beast, but of prices on $15,000 worth of Boots and shoes at No. 2 Martindale's Block.

Having purchased the large and excellent stock of Boots and Shoes formerly owned by Mr. E. C. Hill, at No. 2 Martindale's Block, North Pennsylvania street, in addition to a very large purchase made last month of the manufacturers, and not having store accommodations for half my stock, I will sell for the next 90 days boots and shoes at such prices as will dispel the most skeptical of all doubts as to the truthfulness of the heading of this advertisement. This is no vain trick or device, resorted to in order to get a rush of business at the expense of my competitors or create an unequalled commotion in the shoe trade, but truthfully to reduce a heavy stock that made the purchase necessary in order to secure the business location. Remember these goods have been bought at about two-thirds of the wholesale manufacturers' present prices, and are not offered at a great reduction on account of being damaged or defective in any way. They are as good goods as can be seen in any shoe store in this or any other city in the country, and in order that you may test the correctness of my statement I shall be pleased to show my goods to any and all who may favor me with a call.

STRAITFORD.

This beautiful suburb lies east of the city, two miles distant. It is directly in line with the new location for the University, and about one mile nearer the city. It is one mile and three quarters across the city than Irvington. The grounds, comprising something over 100 acres, are beautifully cultivated, with Pleasant Run meandering through them. They were laid off by eminent landscape surveyors. The lots are large, being from one-half to three and one-half acres each. The location is such that STRAITFORD has the full benefit of all modes of conveyance or running between the city and the University and Irvington. The proprietors are expending large amounts of money in improving the grounds, and intend at once to erect a handsome depot upon the lines of the Central and Junction railroads, which would serve the grounds on one side. Some of the houses already built and others have been contracted for. To see plot learn terms, etc., call upon any of the following parties:

THE ESTEY COTTAGE ORGAN.
The Estey Organs are now acknowledged to be the best Organs made. J. Estey & Co. have invented and adopted more valuable improvements in
REED INSTRUMENTS
Than any other house in the world. THE ESTEY ORGANS have been sold not by extensive advertising and puffing, but by the real merits of the instruments themselves.
The Watchman and Reflectors say of them: "A more delicious combination of sweetness, purity, and power of tone can scarcely be conceived."
